Part 3: Read the passage and choose the correct answers. (5 questions – 0.25 mark/question)

The filming and photography in news programmes is very important in bringing the stories to life and making us realise how events affect people. But the traditional techniques of filming are slowly changing and not everyone is happy with this.

Viewers have recently complained that camerawork on news programmes, while very artistic and clever, is more suited to feature films and documentaries. Apparently, many of us are distracted by clever camerawork and our attention is taken away from the real focus, which is the story.

Several techniques have been criticised. One of these is the ‘circling camera’. This is when the cameraman goes round the person who is talking so that at one point, we see the back of his head. Another technique is when the camera is not held steadily and shakes. It gives the impression of slight panic and is often used in films today.

The BBC insists that camerawork like this is a sign of artistic and technological progress and is interesting and attractive, particularly to a younger audience. But how appropriate is it to have a circling camera when reporting on something as ordinary as interest rates?

Pictures are important in the news because

- A. they help us understand the story.
- B. it’s traditional to have them.
- C. they show us important places.
- D. they show the stories.

ANSWER: A

Some people today complain that

- A. the filming is distracting.
- B. the filming is boring.
- C. the filming isn’t very good.
- D. the filming is good.

ANSWER: A

One modern filming technique is

- A. the camera moves in a circle.
- B. there is a circle of cameras.
- C. when people stand in a circle.
- D. the camera moves around.

ANSWER: A

The television company

- A. thinks it's okay to film this way.
- B. promises to change the way news is filmed.
- C. has apologised.
- D. thinks it's normal.

ANSWER: A

What is the writer's attitude?

- A. He thinks the filming should suit the subject.
- B. He likes artistic camerawork.
- C. He thinks there should be more filming with news stories.
- D. He doesn't like filming.

ANSWER: A

Part 4: Read the passage and choose the correct answers. (5 questions – 0.25 mark/question)

How many tablets do you take? We all take tablets for headaches and other illnesses. But are they necessary the big drug companies make the drugs and tablets that we buy to fight our health problems. But could it be possible that many of these drugs and tablets are only good for the bank balances of the drug companies and that there are better ways for us to get over our health problems? According to some experts we should use the power of our minds.

Since the 1950s there have been experiments using placebos. Placebos are tablets which do not have an effect on the body, so they shouldn't be able to make us better. In the experiments some patients in the group receive real drugs for a health problem, while others receive the placebo. No one knows who has the real drug or who has the placebo. In a significant number of these experiments the patients who haven't received the real drug get better! People think this is perhaps because they are thinking positively and believe they will get better – so they do!

So, can we 'think' ourselves better? Perhaps the big drugs companies should start worrying!

The text suggests that drug companies

- A. make a lot of money.
- B. sell drugs that are too expensive.
- C. sell drugs that are bad for us.
- D. sell drugs that are good for us.

ANSWER: A

It's possible that

- A. we could manage without drugs.
- B. we could live longer without drugs.
- C. we need different sorts of drugs.

D. we need similar kinds of drugs.

ANSWER: A

Placebos

A. should not be able to cure health problems.

B. are experiments done since the 1950s.

C. are tablets for headaches.

D. should be the best choice.

ANSWER: A

In the experiments,

A. patients know it's a possibility they haven't received the real drug.

B. patients know if they don't receive the real drug.

C. patients know they have been lied to.

D. patients know they will be better.

ANSWER: A

According to the article

A. some people can get better if they believe they will.

B. some people get better if their doctor believes they will.

C. some people get better because they stop taking drugs.

D. some people get better after they take drugs.
