Preface

This book grew out of a doctoral thesis I completed at Oxford University during the summer of 2005.

I have accumulated mountainous debts of gratitude while working on this book. First and foremost, my deepest thanks go to Dan Prentice, who was my D Phil Supervisor at Oxford. Dan has been unfailingly generous with his time and indispensable assistance. With respect to almost every part of this book, he has provided extensive comments, insightful suggestions, and occasionally, unflinching but usually well-deserved criticism. Quite apart from his willingness to talk openly and at length (very often on issues which had very little to do with the subject of this book!), his supervision, friendship, humour, and infinite patience cannot be overstated. In addition to receiving his valuable guidance, I had the good fortune of being his research assistant between 2001 and 2005. I have learned immensely from this experience, particularly through the work on several editions of Chitty on Contracts. Special (and warm) thanks are also due to Judith Prentice, for being ‘my honorary mother away from home’.

I have been fortunate in having John Eekelaar, formally, as my College Adviser at Pembroke College, Oxford, though he easily straddles more than this category. His friendship, encouragement, and assistance, in particular in difficult times, cannot be overstated. I would also like to thank Pia Eekelaar for her valuable assistance, comments and suggestions on this work.

A special mention must be given to Mr Justice (retired now) Ishai Levitt, who through his wisdom, kindness, and humour, first introduced me to the delights and depths of corporate law.

I would like also to express my deep thanks to John Lowry, who has been unfailingly helpful, open, and tremendously encouraging. John has read and given detailed and important comments on a number of drafts of this book. I am grateful for his generosity, support and—most of all—friendship.

A number of colleagues and friends at Oxford, UCL, and elsewhere were kind enough to devote their valuable time to my work. They all read at least one, and often several, of the chapters of this book in draft, or the papers derived from it (or in some cases, both). I would like to thank in particular Eva Lominicka, the late Ben Pettet, Nick Gould of Ince & Co International Law Firm (Chapter 4) and Robert Goddard (portions of Chapters 6 and 7) for their insightful comments and ideas, not to mention their time.

I have also benefited greatly from many discussions relevant to the subject of this book with students who took part in my tutorials and lectures at Oxford between 2001 and 2005, and from the comments received at my lectures, seminars, and tutorials at UCL in the last three-and-a-half years.
I was fortunate in having several articles, derived from earlier drafts of chapters in this book, accepted for publication. I thankfully acknowledge the (often detailed) comments I received from the editors and anonymous referees of the following journals: Journal of Corporate Law Studies, European Business Organization Law Review, Modern Law Review, European Business Law Review, Journal of Business Law, International Company and Commercial Law Review and European Company and Financial Law Review. Most of these comments are reflected in the following chapters. In several instances I have been persuaded by the responses to these articles to change my mind about several of the positions I took in them. Needless to say, my current views are described herein.

I am grateful to acknowledge the financial support I received during my doctoral study from a number of sources. They include: Pembroke College, Oxford for awarding me the Senior Arts Scholarship for two consecutive years (between 2001–03). Special thanks are also due to AVI, which allowed me to benefit from its Research Fellowship for Doctoral Studies. Scholarships made available by the University of Oxford and the Anglo-Jewish Students Trust are also greatly appreciated. While working to complete the final manuscript I was generously supported by UCL Faculty of Laws Research and Conference Fund. Finally, I would also like to express my infinite gratitude to my parents for their tremendous financial backing.

Thanks are due also to Kathryn Swift, Benjamin Roberts of Oxford University Press and, in particular, Gwen Booth of the Press for taking the proposal for this book through the various stages of approval, for her support, encouragement, and, most of all, patience. Jen Sloszar provided helpful research assistance during the final stages of the publication process, for which I am most grateful.
Preface

Last, but not least, I would like to thank my family, and my close friends (they know who they are!) for their encouragement, precious support, and most importantly, unexhausting and unconditional love.
