This book began life as a DPhil thesis under the sage supervision of Laura Marcus, without whom, in more ways than one, what follows would not have been possible.

I am grateful for the valuable readings and advice offered at various stages by Rebecca Beasley, Michael Whitworth, Jean-Michel Rabaté, David James, Sianne Ngai, Andrew Dean, Alys Moody, Jarad Zimbler, Peter Riley, Katie Fleishman, and Alexis Brown, all of whom improved what follows no end. For guidance through authors’ archives I would like to thank Mark Nixon of the Beckett International Foundation, University of Reading; Joel Minor of the Olin Library, Washington University, St Louis; and Pat Fox of the Harry Ransom Center, University of Texas at Austin.
I am grateful to have had the opportunity to present early drafts of chapters at a number of conferences, and would like to thank their respective organizers for their invitations: Peter Fifield for the Samuel Beckett Debts and Legacies Seminar, University of Oxford; David James and Urmila Seshagiri for Modernist Reformations and Reactivations at the 15th Modernist Studies Association Conference at Sussex University; Elleke Boehmer for Planned Violence at King’s College, London; Egzi Aranyosi and Priyasha Mukhopadhyay for the Unconventional Archives Workshop at Ertegun House, Oxford; Clare Bucknell and Mary Wellesley for Periodization: Pleasures and Pitfalls, at All Souls College, Oxford; and Alexandra Kingston-Reese for a panel on Reading the Novel with Art at the Modern Language Association Annual Convention, 2017. At Oxford University Press, Eleanor Collins and Catherine Owens provided exemplary editorial advice and efficiency.

I would like to acknowledge the financial support provided by an Arts and Humanities Research Council Studentship and a 1379 Old Members Scholarship from New College, Oxford. I am grateful to the School for Criticism and Theory, Cornell University, and the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst for providing funding for further research visits that sharpened this book’s evidence and arguments. The Department of English at the University of Southampton provided further financial support that helped bring this book to completion, as well as providing the most collegial of environments in which to complete it.

My greatest debt is not financial—it is to my parents, to whom this book is dedicated.
