I wish to express my gratitude to staff in the following institutions: the University of St Andrews library staff and the Special Collections Department; Dr Bruce Barker-Benfield and Dr Christopher Fletcher, the Bodleian Libraries, University of Oxford; Ruth R. Rogers and Mariana S. Oller in Wellesley College Library; David McClay and Rachel Beattie in the John Murray Archive, National Library of Scotland; Virginia Murray and John Murray at 50 Albemarle Street, London; Clive Coward at the Tate, London; Isabella Donadio at Harvard Art Museums; Romana Berg, Nicole Losch, and Bernd Schnarr at the Pinakothek in Berlin. At Oxford University Press, Andrew McNeillie invited me to submit a book proposal, Jacqueline Baker greeted the sample material, Jenny Townsend advised on the later stages, and Rachel Platt saw the typescript into the press.

The Oxford University Press production team, Joy Mellor, Liz Chadwick, Shereen Karmali, and Subramaniam Vengatakrishnan, processed the typescript with incredible speed, professionalism, and more friendliness than a remote process usually permits. I am grateful to Nathan Fisher and Michael Tombs for overseeing the proofs and the index.
Two anonymous readers responded to the proposal and sample material with generous reports. They held diametrically opposing views about the book’s unwritten chapters, but their suggestions were perceptive and stimulating, and where it was not possible to follow them in both directions, I hope they will understand that I have attended to both sets of ideas with equal gratitude and attention.

The University of St Andrews gave me a semester’s sabbatical leave in the spring of 2008 and the autumn of 2012, which enabled me to start and finish the book. I owe thanks to my referees who patiently supported all the unsuccessful applications I made for funded leave in between those dates. Like everyone who has attempted to write anything amid full-time teaching and childcare, I could not have managed without the help of friends, colleagues, and neighbours. Nicholas Roe kindly looked after our son, Matthew, for ten days in the summers of 2009–12, which enabled visits to the British Library and the Bodleian. I am grateful to the Binyons, the Calders, and the McMasters for our intricate reciprocal childcare arrangements after school in term time and during the even more tricky half-terms and in-service training days.

I would like to thank my colleagues Emma Sutton, Gill Plain, Susan Manly, Susan Sellers, Christine Rauer, Thomas G. Duncan, Tom Jones, Michael Herbert, Jane Guttridge, and Sandra Wallace, and my research (p.xiv) students, Alexandra Drayton, Nicola Healey, and Rose Pimentel who, besides writing invigorating PhD theses, helped on many occasions to look after Matthew and welcomed his occasional presence in supervisory meetings. Mary O’Connell, post-doctoral Leverhulme Fellow at St Andrews, and Matthew Ward made me think of Byron in new ways. Gavin Hopps has been a steadfast co-editor on the Longman Annotated English Poets edition of Lord Byron. I am indebted to him for rewardingly exacting discussions of Don Juan, and for sharing with Matthew his expertise in football, Mission Impossible, and Jaffa cakes. Away from St Andrews, I am grateful for the support of my sisters and parents, my sister- and mother-in-law, and my grandmother, who always knew how things would turn out.
The formidable Byron scholar, Andrew Nicholson, died, very sadly, in 2009, but he generously shared his vast knowledge of Byron’s manuscripts with me in the early stages of the Longman edition and has been an inspiring presence throughout. John Barnard and Paul Hammond have shown great forbearance and patience as General Editors. I am grateful to Manchester University Press for permission to rework my chapter from Unfolding the South: Nineteenth-century British Women Writers and Artists in Italy (2003), and to Ashgate for permission to revisit pages from my chapters in Romanticism and Religion from William Cowper to Wallace Stevens (2006) and Fellow Romantics: Male and Female British Writers, 1790–1835 (2009); my thanks also go to the editors of these collections: Alison Chapman, Gavin Hopps, and Beth Lau. Michael Simpson and Barbara Goff offered advice about the reception of Greek theatre; Timothy Webb gave generous assistance in locating Leigh Hunt letters; Jeffrey Cox and Mary O’Connell kindly read and commented on chapters; Nicola Healey and Nora Bartlett read the whole typescript with wonderfully keen proof reading eyes and an Austenian level of attention to detail that has improved the book at numberless points. Nora pointed me to Asa Briggs on ‘things’ and, at their kitchen table, Rob Bartlett gave me an invaluable tutorial on the origins of the Star Chamber.

I am profoundly grateful for the loyal friendship of David Fairer, Mary and Lawrence James, and Nicola Trott. Their encouragement made it possible for work on the book to continue when otherwise it might not have done. David, in particular, urged me to get on with the writing and gave unstintingly of his time and brilliant mind to read and comment on various drafts. The book is dedicated to the guides and guardians of Matthew and to Matthew himself, who was certain that I should have been writing something completely different. Although their wishes are somewhat at variance, I hope they will be happy with the finished book and/or with the fact that the book is finished.

St Andrews, Candlemas 2013.
